

Party for One

This one's for the girls who keep falling for someone who doesn't even know they exist.

"Party for One" is about having a crush that feels all-consuming and very real, even if nothing is actually happening. It's that space where your feelings are strong, your mind is running, and you are stuck somewhere between hoping something will change and realizing it might not.

The song taps into that hopeless romantic side so many girls have. The ones who still believe in love, still picture the happy ending, and still catch themselves daydreaming even when it feels a little out of reach. It's emotional, a little dramatic, and very honest about what that feels like.

Drew wrote "Party for One" from her own experience of going through crushes that never turned into something more. The overthinking, the imagining, the wondering why it never lines up the way you want it to. It is something she knows a lot of other girls deal with, even if no one really talks about it.

But the song is not just about feeling stuck or alone. There is still hope in it. It is about learning how to stand on your own, even when you wish things were different, and still believing that love will come when it is meant to.

At its core, "Party for One" is about being on your own without giving up on love, and realizing you are not the only one feeling that way.
